Burnaby / Coquitlam

Start of Testing and Commissioning on North Road and Clarke Road

The elevated guideway construction between Lougheed Centre Station and Burquitlam Station is complete and crews will now begin the testing and commissioning phase of the Evergreen Line project starting the week of July 6.

Testing and commissioning ensures that trains, equipment and systems operate safely and effectively in advance of the Evergreen Line opening for service. Testing and commissioning will be ongoing throughout the project corridor until the Evergreen Line opens for operation.

WHAT TO EXPECT

- Crews will be testing the power, automatic train control and systems of the section of elevated guideway between Lougheed Centre Station and Burquitlam Station.
- Every effort is being made to minimize noise and disruptions when possible, but nearby residents will notice trains moving at various speeds along the guideway between 11 p.m. and 6 a.m. intermittently over the next few months.
- This phase of testing and commissioning must be done at night when the Millenium Line SkyTrain is not in service.
- Please note that when the Evergreen Line opens, trains will not be running overnight. More detailed information about the schedule will be available closer to the opening date.
- For the first day of testing and commissioning, the test train will move along the guideway between 5 a.m. and 10 a.m.
